School of Humanities (Rhodes)

POSTGRADUATE PROGRAMME

“Environmental Education” – How to deal with difficult terminology of texts written in English

School of Social Sciences (Mytilene) – UNDERGRADUATE & POSTGRADUATE PROGRAMMES

POSTGRADUATE PROGRAMME

“Integration of refugees/migrants in Greece” – two lectures delivered in English in 2023, 2024 and 2025.

UNDERGRADUATE PROGRAMMES

Supporting English Classes

1. Basic English
2. Advanced English

ESP and EAP Teacher in the Departments of:

1. Cultural Technology and Communication;
2. Geography;
3. Social Anthropology and History; and
4. Sociology

English I: ESP (English for Specific Purposes)

Objectives of the course:

Through a variety of teaching materials, in-class activities and pair/group works, this course seeks to help students:

- Develop and enhance reading and writing skills in general and specialist English;
- Learn how to understand and handle, first, short and relatively difficult passages, and, second, long and relatively difficult passages on the respective field written in English by English and/or international scholars in physical and/or electronic form;
- Carry out research on the respective discipline in English in printed and electronic form (in the Library and the Internet respectively) and, eventually, thus, enhance their research skills;
- Give briefings on the research they carry out (short oral presentations) in English on given (by the instructor) or pre-selected (by the student[s]) texts;
- Find and use general and specialist monolingual and bilingual dictionaries in printed and electronic form;
- Construct, maintain and enrich a personal bilingual (English: Greek) Terminological Data Bank (TDB), thus, handling relatively difficult terminology becomes a routine for them;
- Blend EFL and ESP; i.e. use general and specialist English with relative ease;
- Summarise in English short and long specialist texts with relative ease.
- Learn how to render relatively difficult specialist English passages into Modern Greek, since they need to transfer the information and knowledge they acquire to their respective subject classes, which are conducted in Modern Greek.

English II: EAP (English for Academic Purposes)

Objectives of the course:

Through a variety of teaching materials, in-class activities and pair/group works, this course seeks to help students:

- Develop and enhance: advanced reading and writing skills in extensive and very difficult passages on Geography by summarising in English and in Modern Greek extensive specialist texts with ease;
- Develop advanced listening, writing and speaking skills when they listen to short University Lectures delivered by a variety of English nationals by:
  - o Taking notes in English;
  - o Speaking about what the students have listened to;
  - o Writing a summary of the University Lecture(s) in English.
- Enhance advanced research skills by carrying out:
  - o Advanced Search in the Library and on the Internet for bibliographical references; assessment of the materials found;
  - o Advanced Search for electronic dictionaries and engines of machine translation, so that problems with difficult terminology will be overcome;
- Develop 'inter-scientific' competence.
- Develop and enhance advanced writing and presentation skills by learning how to use different styles of writing and presentation in English (i.e. British and American English), so that students can develop intercultural competence in Englishes and World English, especially when trying to do the following tasks:
  - o Oral presentations;
  - o Essay Writing;
    - Paraphrasing, rephrasing and issues of plagiarism;
    - Proof-reading and editing of essays (of past examinations);
    - Letter Writing;
    - CV writing; and
    - Technical reports.

E. NIKOLAREA

- Understand possible differences in academic and professional skills in English and Modern Greek so that students enhance (and maximise) their interlinguistic, “inter-scientific” awareness and intercultural competence.
