Peer Review Policy

JRSEI regards double peer review as the major quality measure, employing the peer review process, in order to maintain academic standards and ensure the validity of papers submitted for publication.

In this process, peer reviewers in the relevant fields, analyze the submitted papers from a broad array of perceptions, including writing mode, accuracy of technical content, documentation, and impact on and implication to the discipline.

Peer reviewers play a pivotal role in JRSEI publishing, and their valuable opinions certify the quality of the paper under evaluation, contributing to approve research and establish a standard for evaluation within research and academic communities.

Depending on reviewer commentary and recommendations, papers may be sent back to authors for revision.

After the Chief-Editor receives the revised manuscript, it is assigned to the reviewer(s) once again, for approval of changes.

The final decision to publish is made by the Chief-Editor.
